Vice Chancellor's Message

Almost a century ago from now, in 1927, Rabindranath Tagore travelled through Malaya, Sumatra, Java and Bali. Of what he saw, he wrote, "Everywhere I could see India, yet I could not recognise it." India is there in the temples, the epics and the languages. The people who received it also made it their own. Understanding that exchange takes patience and good sources.

Prime Minister Narendra Modi announced the Centre at the 22nd ASEAN-India Summit in October 2025. He said then, "The 21st century is our century, the century of India and ASEAN." The Centre works through a few research clusters, covering climate, maritime studies, trade, culture, literature, digital cooperation and international relations.

Nālandā Śodha Vihāra brings the University's research centres together under one roof. The Centre will draw on that company and add a regional focus to NSV's wider work. The Centre's work rests on two foundations. The first is trade, investment, technology and finance. Supply chains, capital flows, digital payments and infrastructure financing link India and ASEAN economies more closely each year. The Centre can undertake careful comparative research in this area. The second is culture, history, archaeology and literature. Cultural practices, inscriptions, excavated sites and manuscripts show how people, ideas and goods moved between our shores. Sanskrit and Pali shaped Thai, Khmer, Lao, Burmese, Malay and Indonesian. This work needs language training, expertise in arts and patience, and I hope the Centre will build these among its young researchers.

Both areas build on old links, and both lay foundations for partnerships ahead. A long history of exchange gives present economic ties a context and a measure of trust. Common positions come more easily when they rest on shared evidence. It also bears on questions and partnerships ahead. Technology is one such partnership. AI and digital technologies are being shaped by a small number of large players. The countries in the region have a shared interest in how these are governed. They also need to keep the national space to take their own decisions. Collective effort, backed by sound research, can serve both aims. This is where South-South cooperation becomes practical; The Centre can produce knowledge that is relevant for the wider Global South.

The Northeast, India's land link to the region, has a natural part in this under the Act East Policy. I hope the Centre will work with universities there. I also hope it will work with institutions across Southeast Asia and South Asia, and with research centres elsewhere that study the region.
The Centre is led by its Director, Ambassador Jaideep Mazumdar, with the guidance of Professor Amarjiva Lochan. Dr Kishore Dhavala is the Coordinator, and a team of researchers supports the work. I thank them all.

The Indonesian writer Pramoedya Ananta Toer wrote, "The act of writing is an act towards the eternal." A newsletter is a modest form of writing. Even so, what we record today becomes the source for those who come after. The past, present and future are connected.

I wish Confluence and the Centre every success.

Director's Message

India and Southeast Asia have traded goods and exchanged ideas for millennia. Today, this ancient connection is deepening through multifaceted cooperation on issues that matter to India and the countries of the region. Shared history and civilization, common interests, and a vision for the future give the relationship profound significance. Unsurprisingly, India's ties with Southeast Asian countries and ASEAN have gained unprecedented momentum. The revival of Nālandā University itself arose from decisions of the East Asia Summit, in which ASEAN plays a central role. Fittingly, Prime Minister Narendra Modi announced the establishment of this Centre for Southeast Asian Studies in Nālandā University at the 22nd ASEAN-India Summit in Kuala Lumpur. To follow the developments in India's relations with the region, we have decided to publish a monthly digest of India's bilateral relations with Southeast Asian countries and with ASEAN. The name 'Confluence' reflects both India's ties with the Mekong-Ganga countries and the shared seas linking the shores of India and Southeast Asia.

Indonesia's Prabowo welcomed by India's Modi at BRICS Summit

Indonesian President Prabowo Subianto attended the 18th BRICS Summit as a full BRICS member for the first time, marking his first trip to India since serving as Chief Guest at the 2025 Republic Day celebrations. He was personally welcomed by Prime Minister Narendra Modi at Bharat Mandapam on 12 September with a handshake and embrace.

KEY DISCUSSIONS :

- The five national-interest agendas were discussed at the summit: reform of the global trading system based on the WTO; cooperation relating to climate change and ecological justice; support for strengthening the New Development Bank; IP/royalty governance in the digital era; and cooperation on food security, energy and trade.
- During the limited session on “Inclusive Global Governance and Strengthening Multilateralism” (12 September), President Prabowo highlighted three points: national self-sufficiency, unity of the Global South and better cooperation among the BRICS countries.
- On 12 September, a 140-paragraph New Delhi Declaration was adopted by the Member States of the BRICS group unanimously and addressed the issues of global governance reform, international disagreements, trade and finance, energy and climate policy, technology, health, agriculture and people-to-people cooperation.
- This year the BRICS Chair was held by India which featured more than 400 meetings in 30 cities across India and Indonesia's first attendance as a full member since joining BRICS in January 2025.
- The summit's significance for India-Indonesia economic relationship in particular was highlighted by Prabowo, who noted the evolution of Indonesia from a rice/corn importer to an exporter, and said that the best way for BRICS countries to move forward is to work together rather than just trading raw commodities a statement that aligns the need for critical minerals cooperation between the two nations.
